Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine if there were differences in the prevalence of risk factors associated with the development of periodontitis between patients with type 2 diabetes mellitus (DM) and non-diabetic controls. A total of 60 patients with DM and 60 age- and sex-matched non-diabetic controls were recruited from a tertiary care dental clinic. All participants underwent a comprehensive clinical examination, including assessment of plaque index, gingival index, bleeding on probing, and periodontal pocket depth. Data analysis revealed that patients with DM had significantly higher levels of plaque, gingivitis, and periodontitis compared to the control group. These findings suggest that DM may be a significant risk factor for the development of periodontitis.
