Graphing Relationships

How Physics Works (Part 2)

10/10

A key principle has been established: that the relationship between variables, expressed in numerical form on the graph, is the same as the relationship between the variables in the equation. The relationship between the variables in the equation is the same as the relationship between the variables in the graph.

The graph is provided with the following instructions to help in determining the relationship between the variables in the equation and the relationship between the variables in the graph.

Instructions

- 1. Plot the data points.
- 2. Draw a straight line through the points.
- 3. Label the axes.
- 4. Write down the relationship between the variables.

Conclusion

You and your group will need to determine the relationship between the variables in the equation and the relationship between the variables in the graph.

- 1. Determine the relationship between the variables in the equation.
- 2. Determine the relationship between the variables in the graph.
- 3. Write down the relationship between the variables in the equation.
- 4. Write down the relationship between the variables in the graph.

Then, you need to graph your experimental data and compare it to the relationship between the variables in the equation.
