CORN CHRONICLES

THE JOURNEY FROM PLATE TO POOP

How the Digestive System Works

When you eat, food enters your mouth. Your tongue helps you chew the food. Saliva in your mouth starts the process of breaking down food. Food then travels down your esophagus to your stomach. In your stomach, stomach acid and enzymes break down food into smaller pieces. Food then moves into your small intestine, where most of the nutrients are absorbed. The remaining waste moves into your large intestine, where water is absorbed. Finally, the waste is eliminated from your body through your rectum and anus.

Breaking Down is Hard to Do

Food is made of many different parts, including carbohydrates, proteins, and fats. Each part is broken down differently. Carbohydrates are broken down into simple sugars. Proteins are broken down into amino acids. Fats are broken down into fatty acids and glycerol. The body uses these nutrients to provide energy and build and repair tissues.

Let's Process This

The digestive system is a complex of organs that work together to break down food and absorb nutrients. The organs include the mouth, esophagus, stomach, small intestine, large intestine, rectum, and anus. Each organ has a specific function in the digestive process.
