How I started my business

I started my own business about three years ago, after giving people "free" computer advice for years. My kids had grown and gone, and I was tired of the job I had for 25 years. I have worked hard on creating a model that works for my clients and for me. I provide completely personalized computer help of all kinds: lessons, troubleshooting, setup, wireless networks, advice, transferring all files and loading software onto new systems, even shopping with my clients. Each person gets 100% of my attention. I try to leave every session with a client who feels more comfortable about using his or her computer and about exploring new possibilities. I work with both individuals and small businesses, including professional offices and nonprofits. I offer special nonprofit rates to organizations, especially those whose mission I deeply respect. I especially love working with seniors. I see my work as giving each person the opportunity to participate in a world that may have become a bit scary, to avoid isolation and to feel good about him or herself. Unlike classes or "lectures," I come to the client's home or place of business, explain everything we are doing, and above all, listen and teach.

I would love to work with you, or someone you know to help you to feel more comfortable and confident about your computer. It's, after
