This was the first time during the 1980s that genetic engineering was used to produce a vaccine against a human disease. The gene was injected into the harmless bacteria, escherichia coli (E. coli). The bacteria were then injected into the recipient's bloodstream. The bacteria were killed by the immune system, but the gene remained in the cells, where it produced the protein that the immune system recognized as dangerous. The protein was then removed by the immune system, leaving the cells with the gene that produced the protein. The gene was then removed from the cells, leaving the cells with the gene that produced the protein.
