the following are common: the use of an inappropriate sample size, the use of an inappropriate statistical test, and the use of an inappropriate level of significance. The use of an inappropriate sample size can lead to a loss of power, which is the probability of rejecting the null hypothesis when it is false. The use of an inappropriate statistical test can lead to a loss of power, which is the probability of rejecting the null hypothesis when it is false. Abstract. The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 10-week training program on the performance of a 1000-m swim time trial. Ten male swimmers participated in the study. They were divided into two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The control group did not receive any training, while the experimental group received a 10-week training program. The training program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 60 minutes. The first session was a warm-up, the second session was a technical drill, and the third session was a strength and conditioning drill. The 1000-m swim time trial was performed at the beginning and at the end of the 10-week training program. The results showed that the experimental group had a significantly lower 1000-m swim time trial time at the end of the 10-week training program compared to the control group. This suggests that the 10-week training program had a positive effect on the performance of a 1000-m swim time trial.
